Prayers-Africa's Drought Crisis

Planting season in Africa is between September and October, and harvest season between April and May. As a result of the drought, the harvest planted in October 2015 was a total failure. The earliest next crop to be planted will be in October 2016, only to be harvested in May 2017. So at best, the first time staple foods like maize and beans could be available will be June/July 2017 once dried and prepared. Of course, should there be another year with poor rainfall like this year, not only would planting be prevented again, but we could be facing a complete humanitarian catastrophe.

What we are already seeing is a crisis on a large scale. This drought has caused widespread hunger and millions of people on the brink of starvation.

Though media outlets are beginning to report on the crisis affecting Southern Africa, it is far from 'big news' yet, with the Syrian refugee crisis taking precedent in the news headlines. Comparatively few people are aware of the drought challenges in Africa, let alone able to engage and make a difference. However, it is of course in these very communities that Hands at Work is already working and seeing first-hand the scale of the crisis busy unfolding.

South Africa, Swaziland, Malawi, Zimbabwe, Mozambique and the south of Zambia have been hardest hit, directly impacted by a severe lack of rainfall. However, all of our countries – including further north in Zambia, the DRC and Nigeria, are suffering from escalated food prices and limited availability of staple foods (in Malawi, for example, staple foods like maize have risen by 73%). Hands at Work is engaged in a very real crisis which is estimated to continue for at least the next 18 months.

So Hands Canada is setting apart Monday April 11 as a day to pray, reflect, fast and to ask God to do work in our own hearts, to help us be faithful and to follow Christ in this. Please join us that day in prayer!

I'm a Stranger Here Myself

Casey O'Hara, a cool and laid back high school senior, thinks he knows what life is all about. Then Casey's world begins to change when family problems arise, he hangs out with his troubled pal, Mark, and he meets a girl named Lori. Suddenly, he is not so sure of the direction he's going and he begins to wonder if Mark's world is really what he wants for himself. Maybe life is about a little bit more than living for yourself. Maybe life is about bigger things...
